4 THINGS YOU NEED TO KNOW

WELCOME TO METRO.US

GREGORY WAKEMAN, ENTERTAINMENT EDITOR

The glitz and glamour of Hollywood takes over downtown Manhattan for the 17th year in a row tonight with the start of The Tribeca Film Festival. There's a whole host of movie premieres and illuminating talks from the world of TV and film, while, unlike most of its peers, the festival firmly embraces new technology, too. Head over to page 16 now to see the movies that I'm most excited about — and read our interview with its prestigious co-founder Jane Rosenthal on page 19 and at metro.us.

ONE DEAD AFTER ENGINE EXPLODES ON SOUTHWEST FLIGHT THAT HAD TAKEN OFF FROM LAGUARDIA

An engine on a Southwest Airlines flight with 149 people aboard exploded in mid-air on Tuesday, killing one passenger and nearly sucking another out of a window that was shattered by shrapnel, according to airline and federal authorities and witness and media accounts. The plane, a Boeing 737 which was bound to Dallas from New York, made an emergency landing in Philadelphia. The death of 43-year-old Jennifer Riordan on Flight 1380 was the first in a U.S. commercial aviation accident since 2009, according to National Transportation Safety Board (NTSB) statistics. NTSB Chairman Robert Sumwalt, at a news conference at the Philadelphia airport, said a preliminary investigation showed that an engine fan blade was missing, having apparently broken off, and that there was metal fatigue where it normally would be attached. Flight 1380 took off from New York's LaGuardia Airport at around 10:27 a.m. and was diverted to Philadelphia just under an hour later, according to flight tracking website FlightAware.com. Southwest CEO Gary Kelly said the flight landed at Philadelphia International at around 11:20 a.m. The engine on the plane's left side threw off shrapnel when it blew apart, shattering a window and causing rapid cabin depressurization that nearly pulled out a female passenger, according to witness accounts and local news media reports. "We have a part of the aircraft missing, so we're going to need to slow down a bit," the plane's captain, Tammy Jo Shults, told air traffic controllers in audio from the cockpit released on NBC News. Asked by a controller if the jet was on fire, Shults said it was not, but added, "They said there is a hole and someone went out." "A woman was partially, was drawn out of the plane and pulled back in by other passengers," Todd Bauer, whose daughter was on the flight, told the NBC affiliate in Philadelphia. At an earlier news briefing in Washington, Sumwalt said that one person had been killed, but did not describe the circumstances. Riordan was a Wells Fargo banking executive and well-known community volunteer from Albuquerque, New Mexico, according to a Wells Fargo official, who spoke on condition of anonymity. Her Facebook page showed that she was married with two children.

NYC TO REMOVE STATUE OF CONTROVERSIAL DOCTOR

3 People gather to watch the removal of a statue of J. Marion Sims, a surgeon celebrated by many as the father of modern gynecology, at Central Park and East 103rd Street on Tuesday. A New York City panel decided to move the controversial statue after groups demanded its removal as many of Sims' medical breakthroughs came from experimenting on black slaves without anesthesia. The statue will be relocated in Green-Wood Cemetery in Windsor Terrace, where Sims is buried.

HALEY VOCAL ON RUSSIA: 'I DON'T GET CONFUSED'

3 U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations Nikki Haley fired back at White House economic adviser Larry Kudlow on Tuesday over his remarks that she may have been confused over Washington's plans to impose more sanctions on Russia. "With all due respect, I don't get confused," Haley, a member of President Donald Trump's cabinet, told Fox News. Haley said on Sunday that Washington was preparing new sanctions on Russia over its support of Syrian President Bashar al-Assad. However, Trump delayed further action, according to a senior administration official. Kudlow said of Haley on Tuesday: "She's doing a great job, she's a very effective ambassador. There might have been some momentary confusion about that." "I think the issue here is we have a set of sanctions and additional sanctions are under consideration but have not been determined," Kudlow told a briefing at Mar-a-Lago. He said there was no confusion in the White House approach toward Moscow. A senior administration official said on Monday that Trump was unlikely to approve them unless Moscow carried out a new cyberattack or some other provocation.

SKETCH RELEASED OF ALLEGED THREAT-MAKER

4 Adult-film actress Stormy Daniels on Tuesday released a sketch of a man she said warned her in 2011 to stop discussing her claims she had a sexual encounter with President Donald Trump, while her lawyer offered a $100,000 reward for information about the man. During an appearance on the daytime ABC television talk show "The View," Daniels repeated her story, first related on CBS' "60 Minutes" last month, that she was on her way to a fitness class with her child when an unknown man approached her in a Las Vegas parking lot in 2011. He warned her to "leave Trump alone. Forget the story," she said in that interview. On Tuesday, her lawyer, Michael Avenatti, asked the public for help identifying the man and offered a $100,000 reward for information leading to his identification.

IMPORTANT NOTICE TO TENANTS WHO RECEIVE OR FORMERLY RECEIVED A NEW YORK CITY DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE "SCRIE" OR "DRIE" RENT FREEZE

YOU MAY QUALIFY TO HAVE YOUR RENT REDUCED

If you are a tenant in New York City who now receives, or used to receive, a rent freeze under the City's SCRIE (Senior Citizen Rent Increase Exemption) or DRIE (Disability Rent Increase Exemption) program, you may be entitled to have your rent reduced to your old frozen rent levels.

If you were unable to appeal a decision or renew your SCRIE or DRIE benefits at any time after December 1, 2011 because you needed more time to file due to a disability or physical or mental impairment, and either you lost your rent freeze benefit or your rent is now frozen at a higher level, you have a chance to be reinstated at your old rent level, even if you have already been reinstated but at a higher rent. This is because of a settlement of a class action case in federal court, Pfeffer et al v. DOF et al, 15 CV 3547, Magistrate Judge Lois Bloom presiding.

To see if you qualify, you must apply to be reinstated by submitting either an "Application for Additional Time to Renew Lapsed Benefit" or an "Application for Additional Time to Renew Expired Benefit." If you need an application you can request one by calling 311 to request one of these Department of Finance ("DOF") applications, or by visiting a DOF office (open Monday through Friday, 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.):

Bronx: 3030 Third Avenue, 2nd Floor
Brooklyn: 210 Joralemon Street
Queens: 144-06 94th Avenue, Jamaica
Staten Island: 350 St. Marks Place

When you submit the application form to DOF, you also may need to provide documents that show your household's financial eligibility, along with copies of old leases. Further information on financial eligibility is available by contacting the Department of Finance at 311 or online at http://www1.nyc.gov/site/rentfreeze/index.page. If you paid a higher rent than your original frozen rent, you may be entitled to reimbursement of the excess rent payments if you provide proof of payment of this higher rent with your application.

You may also contact DOF's Disability Services Facilitator if you have any questions about this process or need help with the form or obtaining documents by calling 311 or submitting an on-line message at: nyc.gov/contactdofeeo.

Please send the application and any supporting documentation to the address on that application no later than October 26, 2018:

PLEASE NOTE THAT YOU MUST REQUEST RELIEF PRIOR TO THE DEADLINE LISTED ABOVE TO ENSURE THAT YOU CAN BE CONSIDERED FOR FULL RELIEF UNDER THE PROPOSED SETTLEMENT. FAILURE TO SUBMIT DOCUMENTATION OF EXCESS RENT PAYMENT PRIOR TO THE DEADLINE WILL RESULT IN AN INABILITY TO RECEIVE REIMBURSEMENT FOR THOSE PAYMENTS.

YOU ARE ENTITLED TO OBJECT TO THE PROPOSED SETTLEMENT:
The federal court will hold a hearing on the fairness of the proposed settlement on July 18, 2018 at 10 AM at the federal courthouse in Brooklyn, Eastern District of New York, 225 Cadman Plaza East, Courtroom 11A South, Brooklyn, New York 11201. Developer MCR unveiled a model room of the TWA Hotel at JFK Airport, which is slated to open in spring 2019. ALL PHOTOS DAVID MITCHELL EXCEPT WHERE NOTED

Here's what rooms at TWA Hotel at JFK will look like

"We're bringing back the ethos of 1962 with everything that we do here. You're going to feel like you're in 1962 again, when traveling was very special."

NIKKI M. MASCALI

Good news, travel buffs, New Yorkers and history and architecture nerds alike: You won't have to wait until next year to see what rooms inside the forthcoming TWA Hotel at JFK Airport will look like.

Developer MCR on Tuesday unveiled a model of one of the 512 guest rooms in the hotel that's slated to open in spring of 2019.

"We're turning this spectacular building into the greatest hotel in the world," said Tyler Morse, CEO of MCR and Morse Development. "We're bringing back the ethos of 1962 with everything that we do here. You're going to feel like you're in 1962 again, when traveling was very special."

The rooms at the TWA Hotel are designed by city-based firm Stonehill Taylor and inspired by that midcentury era. They will feature authentic Knoll furnishings, rotary dial phones complete with today's technology and, quite fittingly, a glamorous martini bar. Rooms also come with bird's-eye views of the TWA Flight Center or JFK's busy runways, which can be seen right from your bed but not heard thanks to the hotel's seven-layer soundproof glass façade.

The forthcoming TWA Hotel will feature 512 guest rooms.

"We're turning this spectacular building into the greatest hotel in the world," said Tyler Morse of MCR and Morse Development.

POWERED BY THE PAST — AND ITSELF

Design on the TWA Flight Center began in 1956, when Morse said "the best aircraft on the street was the Lockheed Constellation; it fit 45 people and went 300 mph." When the terminal opened six years later, it was already obsolete thanks to the newer and much-bigger Boeing 707 jets.

But the Constellation wasn't lost to history because the TWA Hotel will also have an on-site 1956 Connie, as it's known, that is currently being transformed into a bar and restaurant. Kids (hopefully of all ages) will even be able to play in the cockpit of the Connie, which "will look like it's parked out front," Morse said.

The TWA Hotel — which will have its own power plant to be "totally off the grid," Morse said — will be accessible from JFK's Terminal 5. The property will boast six restaurants, eight bars, a rooftop pool deck and open-to-the-public observation decks.

The city's mice are carrying antibiotic-resistant bacteria

A new study out of Columbia's school of public health found that house mice throughout New York City carry E. coli, Salmonella and more.

In one year, 416 mice were collected from residential buildings throughout NYC.

New Yorkers know to steer clear of the city's rats for a multitude of reasons, one being that they can carry diseases. Now, a new study out of Columbia University is reminding residents of another rodent to be wary of.

Mice in New York City carry disease-causing bacteria, some of which may be resistant to antibiotics, according to the study.

The study, published Tuesday in the journal mBio, looked at New York City house mice as "potential reservoirs for pathogenic bacteria" that may spread to humans.

"From tiny studios to penthouse suites, New York City apartments are continually invaded by house mice," lead author Simon H. Williams, a research scientist at CII, said in a statement. "Our study raises the possibility that serious infections — including those resistant to antibiotics — may be passed from these mice to humans, although further research is needed to understand how often this happens, if at all."

Scientists at the Center for Infection and Immunity at Columbia University's Mailman School of Public Health collected 416 mice during one year from residential buildings throughout the city.

These researchers then analyzed the droppings from these mice and discovered that they carried disease-causing bacteria, including E. coli, Salmonella, C. difficile and more. Researchers also found evidence of genes exhibiting antimicrobial resistance to antibiotics.

A previous study of rats in New York by CII investigators found some of the same pathogens, according to the university, like E. coli and Salmonella, both of which can be associated with food poisoning, and C. difficile, which causes symptoms like diarrhea and colitis, or inflammation of the colon.

New Yorkers tend to be too focused on rats, said Dr. W. Ian Lipkin, a senior author of the study and a professor of epidemiology at the school of public health.

House mice in New York City carry plenty of bacteria, some that is resistant to antibiotics, a study found.
WIKIMEDIA COMMONS

"However, from a public health vantage point, mice are more worrisome," he said in a statement, "because they live indoors and are more likely to contaminate our environment, even if we don't see them."

Mayor targets 10 most rat-infested NYCHA developments for extermination efforts

Mayor Bill de Blasio on Tuesday launched an "aggressive" extermination plan targeting the 10 most rat-infested public housing developments.

Ten New York City Housing Authority (NYCHA) developments, where about 23,000 people live, will receive dry-ice treatments, full-time exterminators, trash bins and new concrete floors, the city announced.

"We want to make the greatest city on earth the worst place in the world to be a rat," de Blasio said in a statement. "We are launching an all-out offensive to dramatically reduce the rat population at these developments and improve the quality of life for residents."

The extermination approach will target the rats' food sources and borrows, officials said, in ways that have been shown to be effective at reducing both rat reproduction and populations.

The new trash bins will be compatible with the dimensions of NYCHA trash chutes, the city said.The new concrete floors will help to seal off dirt basements to better keep rats from entering the buildings.

"For too long, residents have had to accept rats as a regular presence," said NYCHA General Manager Vito Mustaciuolo in a statement, "but through the mayor's Rat Reduction Program, we have the resources and support to reduce infestations."

Art — and life lessons — on display at Lavelle School for the Blind's art show

"[Art] shows what my imagination can build up — and shows everybody I can do things," said student Ashley Morisseau.

NIKKI M. MASCALI

The Lavelle School for the Blind in the Bronx held its third annual art show to highlight the talents, imagination and strength of its students. NIKKI M. MASCALI

For anyone who thinks that a school for blind youth wouldn't need an arts program, many of its students will proudly teach you otherwise.

On Friday, for the third year in a row, Lavelle School for the Blind in the Bronx held its annual art show to display colorful works created by the students of art teacher Jessica Jones.

"I love doing art because it really relieves all the stress that you have, and it's really creative," student Ashley Morisseau. "It shows what my imagination can build up — and shows everybody I can do things."

The 20-year-old's art show piece was inspired by one of her favorite animated characters, Nickelodeon's Henry Danger.

"I made it because the character is trying to teach kids that they can make a difference in the world, and if they're too scared, they have to put on a brave face for everybody because if you're scared you can't do anything," Morisseau said.

It's that type of thinking that keeps Jones learning from her students "as much as they have learned from me." She came to Lavelle School for the Blind 12 years ago, after losing her sight at age 37 due to diabetes complications while working at a Manattan public school.

"Perhaps I'm naive, but it never even occurred to me that I could not teach art," she said. "Once I was back in the classroom, I was back in my mode and don't recall thinking about being blind. What was so interesting to me when I first started working here, specifically with the older students, was the number of times I heard, 'You're blind like me, and you're a teacher?' They had never heard of such a thing, and it was just shocking to them that someone who was blind was a teacher."

ARTWORK THAT'S MEANT TO BE TOUCHED

Lavelle School did not have an arts program until Jones came on staff, so she had no idea what to expect creating the program from the ground up with input from her first students.

"I was instantly profoundly moved by the ways I witnessed students adapting to making artworks," she said. "It's artwork meant to be touched, manipulated — it will not break if a child drops it on the floor. They have this ethic of making things that are available to people and instead of getting the teasing and 'you can't do that' that they get outside of school, they invite the community to come see what they can do."

Assistant Principal Deni Fraser has seen firsthand how beneficial the school's art program and art show has been for students, who range from ages 3 to 21.

"It's helped them in so many ways. They are taught that art is an extension of who you are, and there's no right and wrong," he said. "It just boosted their self-esteem and confidence."

High rent forces out B.B. King Blues Club in Times Square

Not even major venues are immune to rising rents as B.B. King Blues Club & Kitchen announces it'll close after 18 years on 42nd Street.

EVA KIS
eva.kis@metro.us

As small arts venues continue to struggle in New York, there's a new reminder that not even big ones are immune to the same challenges. Times Square's home for jazz, R&B and soul B.B. King Blues Club & Grill will have its final show on April 29 after an 18-year tenure on 42nd Street, owner Blue Note Entertainment Group announced on Tuesday. The company blamed escalating rent for the closure, and said it is looking to reopen B.B. King in a new Manhattan location.

The closing comes just after owner Blue Note opened a new Times Square venue Sony Hall, focusing on modern music across all genres, last month inside the former Diamond Horseshoe space. The company also operates the Highline Ballroom.

"It is with an extremely heavy heart that we share the news about B.B. King Blues Club's closing. Despite many sold out shows, the location's rent escalated to an unsustainable level, leaving us no choice but to close our doors," says the club's COO Tsion Bensusan in a statement.

"Unfortunately this has become a growing trend in New York City, with other iconic music venues and businesses falling victim to opportunistic property owners. This venue's legacy extends much further than the stage, playing a role in Times Square's revitalization two decades ago. It is a shame that wasn't taken into consideration regarding its future in the area."

"Despite many sold out shows, the location's rent escalated to an unsustainable level, leaving us no choice but to close our doors."
Tsion Bensusan

The rapid closing of small music venues and the challenging climate for New York City's creative community prompted Mayor Bill de Blasio to appoint Ariel Palitz as the city's first-ever Night Mayor, who started the job last month. Palitz is a former nightclub owner and has served on a Community Board, and now oversees a 12-person advisory board that is meeting with local businesses and activists to make its recommendations to the City Council and the mayor's office.

Trump says legislation needed after Supreme Court ruling on immigrant felons

The court issued the ruling at a time of intense focus on immigration issues in the U.S. as Trump seeks to increase deportations of immigrants. GETTY IMAGES

President Donald Trump said Congress must quickly pass legislation that would permit the deportation of immigrants who commit violent crimes after the Supreme Court ruled on Tuesday that current law was unconstitutionally vague.

"This is a public safety crisis that can only be fixed by Congress — House and Senate must quickly pass a legislative fix to ensure violent criminal aliens can be removed from our society," Trump said on Twitter.

"This is a public safety crisis that can only be fixed by Congress."

Donald Trump

The court, in a 5-4 ruling in which President Donald Trump's conservative appointee Neil Gorsuch joined the four liberal justices, invalidated the provision in the Immigration and Nationality Act and sided with convicted California burglar James Garcia Dimaya, a legal immigrant from the Philippines.

The ruling, written by liberal Justice Elena Kagan, was decried by the administration, which had defended the provision.

Federal authorities had ordered Dimaya deported after he was convicted in two California home burglaries, in 2007 and 2009, though neither crime involved violence.

Kagan said the disputed provision's ambiguity created confusion in lower courts. "Does car burglary qualify as a violent felony?" Kagan wrote. "Some courts say yes, another says no." Kagan mentioned other examples including rape, evading arrest and trespassing in which courts have also been divided.

Gorsuch, in a concurring opinion, wrote that the American colonies in the 18th century cited vague English law like the crime of treason as among the reasons for the American revolution.

"Today's vague laws may not be as invidious, but they can invite the exercise of arbitrary power all the same — by leaving the people in the dark about what the law demands and allowing prosecutors and courts to make it up," Gorsuch added.

It was not entirely surprising that Gorsuch would break with the four other conservatives on the court and vote to strike down the provision. Gorsuch is ideologically aligned with the late conservative Justice Antonin Scalia, whom he replaced on the court last year. Scalia wrote a 2015 ruling that was invoked in Tuesday's decision that found that a similar provision in a federal criminal sentencing law was overly broad.

Gorsuch interpreted the immigration provision based on the original understanding of the Constitution, a view held by many conservative jurists.

"Today's ruling significantly undermines DHS's efforts to remove aliens convicted of certain violent crimes, including sexual assault, kidnapping, and burglary, from the United States," Department of Homeland Security spokesman Tyler Houlton said. "By preventing the federal government from removing known criminal aliens, it allows our nation to be a safe haven for criminals and makes us more vulnerable as a result," Houlton added.

U.N. Ambassador Nikki Haley announced new economic sanctions on Russia for its backing of Syrian President Bashar al-Assad before President Trump reversed course, saying that additional sanctions were unwarranted. GETTY IMAGES Economic sanctions: What are they and are they effective?

Sanctions are one of the most frequently used tools in foreign relations with bad actors. But do they work?

letters@metro.us

Over the weekend, United Nations Ambassador Nikki Haley announced new economic sanctions on Russia for its backing of Syrian President Bashar al-Assad. On Monday, President Trump reversed course, saying that additional sanctions were unwarranted.

What are economic sanctions?

Economic sanctions are financial penalties levied by a government against another government, a business or an individual. They could include freezing assets, banning trade or levying tariffs. The goal could be to punish a government for human-rights abuses, deny bad actors money to continue their bad actions, or coerce a government into doing something it doesn't want to do (or stop doing something it wants to keep doing).

For example, as punishment for Russia's invasion of Ukraine, the U.S. froze assets of certain Russian banks and oligarchs connected to Putin, and prohibited U.S. firms from doing business with them.

"Never have [sanctions] enjoyed so much popularity as they do today," writes Edward Fishman in "Foreign Affairs." On virtually every major foreign problem — North Korea's belligerence, Iran's nuclear aspirations, Russia's aggression, the Islamic State's (or ISIS') brutality—the U.S. government has turned to some form of sanctions as an answer. Their value is one of the few things that former President Barack Obama and President Donald Trump agree on."

ARE ECONOMIC SANCTIONS EFFECTIVE?

That's debatable.

After all, the U.S. has enacted sanctions on Russia, Syria and North Korea, yet the underlying issues — Russian belligerence, Assad's civil-rights abuses and North Korea's nuclear program — persist. President Barack Obama levied sanctions against Iran to stop its own nuclear program starting in 2010, but it took many rounds of talks and the cooperation of five other nations for the Iran nuclear deal to be signed in 2015.

"All too often sanctions turn out to be little more than expressions of U.S. preferences that hurt American economic interests without changing the target's behavior for the better," writes Richard N. Haass of the Brookings Institution. "As a rule, sanctions need to be less unilateral and more focused on the problem at hand." He points out that sanctions can have unintended economic consequences, can lead to "sanctions fatigue" among allies and tend not to accomplish large goals in a short time frame.

"There are very few cases where you can definitely identify sanctions as having had a success, except sometimes in combination with other factors," Adam Roberts, a professor at Oxford University, told the BBC. "Arguably they contributed something to the change in white minority Rhodesia that led to black majority rule; arguably the sanctions against South Africa were one factor that contributed to change there." But, he pointed out, they were not the definitive element.

Former first lady Barbara Bush dead at 92

Barbara Bush GETTY IMAGES

Barbara Bush had just celebrated her 73rd wedding anniversary in January.

Former first lady Barbara Bush, the only woman to see her husband and son sworn in as U.S. president, died on Tuesday, the Bush family said. She was 92.

Bush was the wife of the 41st president, George H.W. Bush, and mother of the 43rd, George W. Bush.

The Bush family had announced in a statement on April 15 that she was in failing health, had decided not to seek further medical treatment and instead would focus on "comfort care."

Bush reportedly had been battling chronic obstructive pulmonary disease and congestive heart problems.

Barbara Bush was dubbed "The Silver Fox" by her husband and children. She was known for her snow-white hair and for being fiercely protective of her family.

She was first lady when her husband was in the White House from 1989 to 1993. Her son, George W. Bush, triumphed in the disputed 2000 U.S. election and was president from 2001 to 2009. The father-and-son presidents were sometimes referred to as "Bush 41" and "Bush 43."

The Bushes had celebrated their 73rd wedding anniversary in January 2018.

Bush had an independent streak and could be sharp-tongued. As first lady, she promoted literacy and reading but said she was more interested in running a household than in helping her husband run the country.

She discouraged speculation that she wielded political influence with the president like her predecessors — Ronald Reagan's wife, Nancy Reagan, and Jimmy Carter's wife, Rosalynn Carter.

"I don't fool around with his office and he doesn't fool around with my household," she once said.

The only other woman to be both wife and mother of U.S. presidents was Abigail Adams, the first lady from 1797 to 1801. She was a major influence on husband John Adams, the nation's second president, but died before son John Quincy Adams was elected president in 1824.

Another of Bush's sons, Jeb, sought the 2016 presidential nomination, and she campaigned for him before he dropped out of the race. REUTERS

Official: Trump's intelligence chief had secret meeting with North Korean leader

Secretary of State nominee Mike Pompeo has reportedly made a secret trip to North Korea. GETTY IMAGES

Secretary of State nominee and CIA Director Mike Pompeo made a secret visit to North Korea over the Easter weekend and met with North Korean leader Kim Jong Un, a senior U.S. official said on Tuesday.

Pompeo's conversations fueled President Donald Trump's belief that productive negotiations were possible with North Korea, but far from guaranteed, according to the official briefed on the trip, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Trump said earlier on Tuesday the United States was engaged in direct talks at "extremely high levels" with North Korea to try to set up a summit between him and its leader, Kim Jong Un.

Trump sowed some confusion by suggesting he had been speaking to Kim directly, but later clarified by saying: "Let's leave it a little bit short of the highest level."

Spokeswoman Sarah Sanders added: "The president said the administration has had talks at the highest levels and added that they were not with him directly."

Asked about Pompeo, she said: "The administration does not comment on the CIA director's travel."

Pompeo's trip made him the most senior U.S. official to visit North Korea since then-intelligence chief James Clapper in 2014.

The president's comments came as he and Japanese Prime Minister Shinzo Abe opened two days of talks at the president's Mar-a-Lago retreat in Palm Beach, Florida.

The meetings included a walk around the carefully manicured grounds of the beachfront club and dinner on the patio with their wives.

Trump said he believed there was a lot of goodwill in the diplomatic push with North Korea, but added it was possible the summit — first proposed in March and which the president said could take place in late May or early June — may not happen. REUTERS

Hundreds of worst pain sufferers from tri-state area calli

NYC Pain MD* is a clinic with two locations in New York City that has made a name for itself by treating the worst cases of back or neck pain.

Here is what every back and neck pain sufferer who has failed to respond to other treatments and does not want surgery should know about one of the best treatment options available today for severe back and neck pain including when, why and where you should consider this treatment to get maximum results.

If you suffer with back, neck or nerve pain, you have probably already tried many treatments ... especially countless pain medications.

Experienced doctors understand that even though pain medications such as anti-inflammatory pain pills are part of the recommended early treatment plan for back pain... they are rarely the answer.

In most cases they have minimal, short term results (if any) and have a laundry list of potential side effects. Some being serious and even life threatening.

Are there any better options?

Thankfully, advancements in science and technology come extremely fast. And now there is very good option to help relieve the pain.

An option that a lot of back and neck pain sufferers may have never heard of before.

Before we get further into this:

NYC Pain MD is a REAL medical clinic that has treated the worst cases of back pain. Patients travel from all over to be treated at one of their clinics for all sorts of joint and muscle pain because they want the best medical treatments available.

What you are about to discover is a REAL medical treatment. Not some miracle cure you see on infomercials or on the internet.

Know this fact: There is no one treatment that will help every case of back pain. And we cannot guarantee this treatment will work for you. But this treatment has already helped countless back and neck pain sufferers who had given up hope. I bet many just like you.

What is this treatment? It's called...

Radiofrequency Neurotomy: "Radiofrequncy Neurotomy" is often referred to as RF for short.

Just what is "RF"?

RF is a procedure that is based on the concept that blocking the nerve supply to the painful area may alleviate pain and restore function.

There are many nerves around your spine and one of their jobs is to sense PAIN.

Radiofrequency waves are delivered to these nerves under advanced medical imaging to "block"thenerves and slow down the pain.

Two procedures are performed. First, a test, diagnostic "Block" procedure is pain and improve function.

If this first "test" procedure is successful, the Radio Frequency Neurotomy is scheduled and performed for longer term relief.

What Results Can You Expect?

Like all real medical procedures... results vary for individual patients. No good and ethical doctor would guarantee any exact results for any procedure... that's just not how things work and it would be less than honest.

That's being said, it is not uncommon for patients to get complete, if not significant relief of their pain shortly after the treatment.

How Long Do The Results Last?

This procedure "impairs" the nerves pain signals... it does not destroy them. Therefore, the results are safe but not completely permanent. But, many patients get relief for 6 months… 12 months…. 18 months for some even longer. The great news is - another procedure can be safely preformed for more relief if necessary.

While we cannot claim this is a complete "permanent cure" . . . it can be a godsend for so many who were in constant pain.

Really... what would it be worth if you could get out of pain for long enough so you could start enjoying your everyday life again?

able to finally get a goodnight's sleep again? How about being able to go for a simple walk or just do your basic daily chores without worrying about so much pain?

Is It Safe?

Yes. This procedure has been done countless times and continues to have an excellent safety record. It is minimally invasive and i*s not surgical.*

Who Should Try This Treatment?

RF should be considered after other treatments, such as anti - inflammatory pain medication and physical therapy do not offer good enough results.

RF has also been found effective AFTER back surgery when patient's still feel pain.

The pain after a failed back surgery can be debilitating for some and this procedure may be the only thing that helps give you relief.

What To Do Next If You Are In Pain And The "X" Factor

Here is the "X" factor many do not consider that might be the difference between you getting the best possible treatment or not.

Many experts suggest choosing a medical clinic that offers all these treatments and has the proper, most advanced technology all under one roof without the need for a surgical center or hospital.

Amy Schumer's 'I Feel Pretty' producer fights back against trailer backlash

Mary Viola insists the Amy Schumer comedy "shows what a little bit of confidence can do."

GREGORY WAKEMAN
Gregory.Wakeman@metro.us

When the trailer for "I Feel Pretty" was initially released there was more than a little discontent, as some viewers immediately decided that the comedy would be insulting and offensive to women.

That couldn't be further from the truth. I recently had the chance to speak to "I Feel Pretty's" producer Mary Viola, and she revealed that this reaction to the clip left those involved stunned,disappointed and completely missed the point of the film.

How did you first get involved in "I Feel Pretty"?
I met with its writers and directors and the script had a great message, but it wasn't overly preachy. That's something that audiences can usually sniff out. We then sent the script to Amy Schumer, who this was really written for. It was really one of the best experiences that I've had getting a movie made.

What was the message that attracted you then?
That it's inside that counts. And now more than ever that's what needs to come through. Because everybody struggles with self-esteem. Even people that are stunning. Everyone is insecure. We all have feelings of inadequacy. I gravitated to the material because I've felt like that. I want people to walk out of this film with confidence. This movie shows what a little bit of confidence can do.

> "I do love stories of female empowerment."
> Producer Mary Viola

Was this a topic you were actively looking to approach?
There was just something that touched me. I do love stories of female empowerment. And this really is a female story, and we're always trying to take a new approach and make sure that everyone's represented. Amy is just so easy to watch and so approachable and she's just amazing.

Could anyone else have played Renee?
I don't think that anyone else could have done this to the degree that she does. She pulls it off 100 percent. It was amazing to watch her on set. Because she'd have to change from confident Renee to unconfident Renee every other hour. I'm sure it was grueling, but she never said a word and was great.

When did Amy Schumer get involved?
We brought her on as a producer shortly after she read the script. She worked on the script, too, but then I really wanted her creative input throughout. And she really earned those producing stripes. She got involved to such a large degree, by helping to put together sequences, and even became involved in post, recommending songs. I just can't say enough great things about her. A lot of her came into the project. She was able to take on her insecurities. She talks about it a lot how when we are little girls we have all of the confidence in the world, but then over time people just wear you down and we lose that.

How did you feel about the backlash to the trailer?
I was really disappointed in that reaction. It was a few comments that wound up turning into more of a story than it really was. Because I really like the early trailers.

It was always going to be the case that the film wouldn't have a negative message.
I wish people would wait to comment until they've seen something. If you want to judge the film after you've watched it that is absolutely your prerogative. But to do so after a 30 second spot that wasn't intended to create that response was disappointing. Especially because Amy Schumer, Aidy Bryant, a female director and female producers are involved. The female force behind the movie was intentional. Early screenings have cleared that up. Because the film couldn't be more inspiring and uplifting.

"I Feel Pretty" will be released on April 20.

‘We have always been political’

Jane Rosenthal talks about the 17th year of the Tribeca Film Festival.

GREGORY WAKEMAN
Gregory.Wakeman@metro.us

Jane Rosenthal on the festival’s history, and the artistic messaging that’s important. GETTY IMAGES

When Jane Rosenthal co-founded the Tribeca Film Festival with Robert De Niro and Craig Hatkoff back in 2002 she thought it would be a one time event.

“We just wanted to bring people back to downtown Manhattan after 9/11 through movies and storytelling that talked about our similarities despite our different global backgrounds,” Rosenthal said in an interview ahead of the film festival’s 17th year.

For Rosenthal, these origins mean that “the festival has always been political.” The political climate and recent social and culture movements always meant that this year was going to be no exception.

“So many of the films represent cultural shifts in our society,” Rosenthal said of this year’s selections, while she also explained why there was no need for those behind the festival to react to the Time’s Up movement — Tribeca has been backing female filmmakers for years.

“Our company is 60-plus women. Issues like Time’s Up — we’ve been doing that for years. We have turned it up a notch this year, though. We wanted to have 50% female directors in our programs. We only got to 46%, but that was something we consciously did.”

Rosenthal also made sure to note the Time’s Up all-day event Saturday, April 28, which, she explained, will feature conversations with outspoken women on their pivotal roles in raising awareness about inequality in the workplace as they seek the next steps to establish the parameters for lasting change across industries and the pay spectrum.

“It’s about looking forward and looking to our recent past,” Rosenthal said of the event and the festival itself. “It is all about trying to create a narrative. We as a society tend to have short term memories. Certainly some people can’t remember what they write on Twitter from one hour to the next.”

In order to do just that the 2018 Tribeca Film Festival will once again premiere and showcase stories across various mediums, from film to television to virtual reality.

“We always look at how new technology can enable storytellers to tell their stories in a new way. We were one of the first festivals to feature a film shot entirely on a Nokia. But it is not about showcasing technology for technology’s sake. We are platform-agnostic. If it is a good story, we will screen it.”

‘Harry Potter’ director Chris Columbus on mentoring indies

The father-daughter duo’s collaboration resulted in it’s own company.

GREGORY WAKEMAN
Gregory.Wakeman@metro.us

Daughter and dad, fostering new directors. GETTY

Eleanor Columbus, 29, showed her eye for scouting movie projects at an unerringly young age.

She was the one who persuaded her dad, Chris Columbus, to read J.K. Rowling’s “Harry Potter” books, the first two installments of which he directed in the early 2000s.

So it was little surprise that Chris, who also wrote “Gremlins” and “The Goonies” as well as directed “Home Alone” and “Mrs. Doubtfire,” decided to start the company Maiden Voyage with Eleanor all with the intention of assisting first-time filmmakers.

The ascent of the studio over the last few years has been astounding, as the pair have brought the likes of “The Witch” and “Patti Cake$” to the big screen.

Because of this success, the pair were honored at the 2018 Tisch Gala, the school at New York University that they both graduated from — several decades apart.

What was your response to being honored?

My first response is to always legitimately say, “No, I’m not old enough for this yet. I have more to accomplish.” But because of the unique nature of it, and they were honoring both me and my daughter, I looked back on our recent filmography and I thought, “We have done OK.” I felt it was nice and the right time. And it is good for the school because it encourages more young filmmakers to go out and make their own films. Which is the philosophy of Maiden Voyage.

You and Eleanor both went to Tisch. Do you ever talk about your times there?

When Eleanor went, I wouldn’t say it is more corporate, but it was four times the size. The school has a much more well-rounded curriculum. Because when I was there, it was all geared toward production. You were either a writer or a director. Now it’s specialized. They can teach you how to become a producer, a production designer — it’s geared toward getting employment in the real world.

“The Witch” MAIDEN VOYAGE

What were the origins of Maiden Voyage?

For four or five years, once a year I would work with NYU on the Columbus Vague Awards, which was an early version of Maiden Voyage. We would meet five or six filmmakers from NYU and release a certain amount of money to help them make their first films. I just loved their energy and the creative excitement. But they would make the movies and I would never see them again. I then called Eleanor and said, ‘We should take this idea and start a company. Help the filmmakers find funding but then we can creatively be involved as much as we need to be.’ Eleanor agreed. We moved to San Francisco and started the company.

What’s the working dynamic between the two of you like?

Eleanor will go through five or 10 scripts a week, and once every few weeks she’ll find a script that she wants to proceed with; 90% of the time we agree. We have had one or two disagreements along the way. Our role is finding the right fit for the movie. We have a three-strike rule: We read the script, see the short film of the person, and then we meet the filmmaker to see that they have the confidence and the ability to direct the film and work with actors. Our role is to find someone with a good storytelling sense. We want the filmmakers to feel artistically free.

What’s the goal for Maiden Voyage?

We want to help film students, even those that have been out of it for a while, make the films they’re passionate to make. We never thought about the commercial side of it, really. It was all about getting the films celebrated and seen by people. But that changed a little bit with “The Witch.” Because “The Witch” was made for $1.8 million and then made $40 million. The mercenary side had to take over a little bit. Because Robert Eggers fulfilled his artistic vision and made a film that connect with an audience. That was an eye opener. And now, with each film, I want to make a film that does connect with audiences. Even at this level no-one has a crystal ball about what audiences want to see. So there is a battle in fighting against the mercenary side of the company and still pursuing each director’s artistic vision.

Domino's now delivers to beaches and parks

But is that a good thing?

EVA KIS
eva.kis@metro.us

Domino's has expanded its delivery service to basically anywhere. The new Hotspots program, which launched this week possibly to coincide with the improving weather, can deliver a pizza to you at 150,000 outdoor locations nationwide. In New York, those include the end of every street heading to Coney Island Beach, Lasker Rink at the north end of Central Park, the basketball court at NYCHA's Wyckoff Gardens Colony in Brooklyn and the Queens Public Library on 55th Street.

Setting aside whether easier access to Domino's pizza is a good thing, there's a bigger question. Is all this convenience a good thing?

We're living in the Age of Convenience, when companies are working hard to make the dream of getting whatever you want whenever you want a reality. UberEats can already deliver to you curbside anywhere, while Amazon Prime Air continues to develop a drone delivery service promising any item in 30 minutes or less — the same delivery promise Domino's made until the mid-'90s.

This all sounds great in theory. How amazing would it be to crave a burrito and have one in your hand after a few well-placed clicks wherever you are? But the reality is this hurts local restaurants and, ultimately, you.

Instead of walking down the street to get that burrito at a local taqueria, you choose to order from whichever restaurant — and it's probably going to be a national chain — will bring it to your park bench, coffee shop seat or library steps.

The effect of delivery services on restaurants continues to be debated. Companies like Grubhug Seamless, DoorDash and Postmates argue they help raise restaurant revenues; restaurateurs say they're having to fork over up to 20 percent of the price of a dish in an industry where profits are well below 10 percent for most eateries.

You'll still have to leave your beach towel, but Domino's will deliver. GETTY IMAGES

But let's make this personal. Consider the potential cost to our culinary variety when anything can be delivered anywhere. Do we want all our food to come from a series of industrial kitchens, primarily engineered not to be delicious but to travel well?

All of these services to make our lives easier — delivery, personal assistants like Apple's Siri and Alexa, etc. — has spurred plenty of self-reflection about the tyranny of convenience. Most recently, the New York Times' Tim Wu ruminated on the cost to our very souls: "Convenience seems to make our decisions for us, trumping what we like to imagine are our true preferences." But to fight it — those who aren't on social media or prefer to read print newspapers or books — are seen as violating norms and mocked with nicknames like luddite.

So next time you need a pizza, or any other food, think about taking a walk down your block after work and picking one up from a local store instead of opening an app. Or if you must, consider one with better corporate policies like the local pizzeria app Slice.

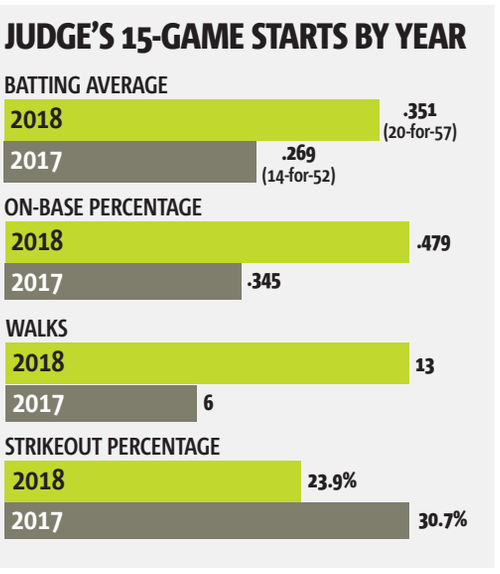
Breaking down Aaron Judge's hot start in 2018

No. 99 is raking this year, but is it better than his hot start from 2017?

JOE PANTORNO
joseph.pantorno@metro.us

Aaron Judge is showing that he made adjustments over the winter. GETTY IMAGES



It would have been unfair for those around Major League Baseball to expect Aaron Judge to replicate the numbers he put up during his historic 2017 American League Rookie of the Year campaign.

He set an MLB record with 52 home runs by a first-year player, leading the AL, while driving in 114 runs and batting .284.

The year didn't come without some concerns though. As pitchers began learning how to pitch to the 6-foot-7 juggernaut, Judge's numbers slumped mightily during the second half of the year.

After batting .329 with 30 home runs and 66 RBI in the first 84 games of the season, Judge batted just .228 with 99 strikeouts in his final 71 appearances. Strikeouts have always been a problem, especially when pitchers began catching on that he had problems hitting the ball low and away.

With that in mind, it would have been understandable for Judge to start a bit slower compared to last season.

The thing is, Judge has been one of the Yankees' best hitters during an inconsistent start to the season. He leads the team in batting average and on-base percentage while ranking second in home runs, RBI and slugging percentage, all behind the red-hot Didi Gregorius.

And while there is going to be plenty of focus set upon Giancarlo Stanton, whose debut in the Bronx has been less than auspicious, to say the least, Judge is proving early on that 2017 wasn't just a flash in the pan. It might have just been the start.

There is a noticeable discrepancy in Judge's stats, except for strikeouts. His plate discipline isn't much improved compared to last year, but his ability to cover the zone is.

Swinging at pitches outside of the zone, Judge made contact 44.8-percent of the time last year. This year he's seen a 7.3 percent increase, which has helped him work the count into more favorable positions, drawing more than double the walks he had this time last year while his average and on-base percentage skyrocket.

Rangers national anthem singer John Amirante dies at 83

Long-time New York Rangers national anthem singer John Amirante died Tuesday morning at the age of 83, the team announced.

"It is with great sadness our Rangers family shares the loss of legendary anthem singer John Amirante, who passed away this morning at 83," the Rangers wrote on Twitter. "Our thoughts are with his wife Ann, his children and the entire Amirante family. We will forever remember and miss John at the Garden."

Amirante, a Bronx native who lived in Plainview since 1968, sang the national anthem for 35 years prior to Rangers games, stopping in 2015. However, he would make rare appearances in some big games even after his retirement.

John Amirante. GETTY IMAGES

Among his most notable recent appearances, he sang the anthem before Game 4 of the 2017 Eastern Conference semifinal against the Ottawa Senators, which the Rangers would go on to win 4-1 to tie the series at two games apiece before falling in six games.

But Amirante was a fixture at some of the most important games in Rangers history, including a powerful rendition prior to Game 7 of the 1994 Stanley Cup Final against the Vancouver Canucks, a game New York would win while delivering the city its first Stanley Cup since 1940. JOE PANTORNO

Longtime New York Jets offensive lineman Nick Mangold will retire in green and white, just like it should be. GETTY IMAGES

NO ONE LOVED JETS QUITE LIKE MANGOLD

OPINION

KRISTIAN DYER

Kristian Dyer is a columnist and Jets beat writer for Metro New York. @KristianRDyer

Nick Mangold is retiring a New York Jet, the epitome of a leader calling it an end to a career that will soon land him in Canton. This oft-beleaguered franchise will certainly never have another offensive lineman quite like Mangold, someone who embraced being a Jet like few before him.

It is hard to think of an offensive lineman, let alone a center, who was as consistent as Mangold during his 11 years with the Jets. The former first-round pick out of Ohio State, taken by the Jets at the tail end of the first round in 2006, exceeded every expectation placed on him during the entirety of his career, all spent here in New York. His play was strong, as evidenced by seven Pro Bowl selections and twice being tabbed an All-Pro.

But it was his leadership, his poise and his ability to calmly settle the offensive line that will stand out the most from his career. The mold was broken after Mangold was made.

Always the personality, Mangold was quick with a quip or a joke or, very often, to teasingly put a media member in his or her place after a baiting question. At the end of the day, he was true to himself as a man, even if it wasn't always popular.

Mangold drew some flack for his support of Republican presidential candidates Mitt Romney and current President Donald Trump, sometimes appearing at political rallies for these two. He never tiptoed around his views or beliefs, it wasn't in his nature.

On the field, Jets fans should count themselves blessed that Mangold was on their team because he was one of them.

Fiery, he is one of the few players to come through the locker room at the Meadowlands who bled his team's colors. When on the field, Mangold wanted nothing more than to punch his team into the end zone.

He had a dirty job, but Mangold wouldn't have it any other way. In many ways, this personifies the ethos of the Jets fan. There was a chip on his shoulder, to say the least.

Unlike many of the other franchises in this area, the Jets aren't quite as glamorous. For years they played second fiddle in a stadium named after their crosstown rival. They have just one championship in their five decades on the field and precious few highlights. Jets fans have thick skin now from years of suffering and in Mangold, they had a player who got it.

He was a blue-collar guy with a lunch pail mentality. All he wanted to do every day was work and grind. In so many ways, he personified the mentality of the long-suffering fans of this team. He lived for the colors.

And when things got rocky in the locker room as they frequently did around this franchise over the past decade, that is when Mangold stood tall. He would be unflappable in his defense of his team and would stand-up for the 52 players around him.

It is fitting now that Mangold will sign a one-day contract to retire with the Jets, one last chance for fans to see one of the franchise's all-time greats in the green he so passionately protected all these years.

Then, a handful of years from now, they'll get the chance to rise again and cheer him one last time when he gets enshrined in the Pro Football Hall of Fame. He will do so, as is deserving, as a Jet.

And he will be enshrined someday as one of "them" – those fans crazy enough to cheer for this team after so many tough years. For in Mangold, the Jets fan had one of their own on the field each and every week.

Aries Learn from your mistakes and be ready to set some guidelines and rules in place to ensure that you reach your goal. Research and dedication are your route to victory.

Taurus A personal change will suit your current needs and give you the boost you need to pursue bigger and better objectives. Use common sense and apply your skills strategically.

Gemini You need to take a closer look at your personal situation. If you aren't happy with a relationship you have with someone, speak up and make suggestions.

Cancer You'll be reminded of a change you made that you aren't happy about. Use this experience to help you avoid making a similar mistake.

Leo Get as much done as you can to avoid complaints and criticism. Be open about the way you feel and what you would like to see happen. Embrace change.

Virgo Emotional issues should not be vocalized around anyone you cannot trust to keep a secret. Concentrate on making personal physical changes.

Libra Choose your words wisely if you want to convince others to help you or approve of your plans. Listen to sound advice regarding a change you want to make.

Scorpio Get to the bottom of a situation that could influence your earning ability. A contract will need to be adjusted before you continue to offer your services or help.

Sagittarius Talk over your concerns to find out exactly where you stand. A partnership will need some fine-tuning if you plan to move forward or make a commitment.

Capricorn Plan to have some fun. Going on a shopping spree or spending time with someone who rocks your world will improve your attitude. A healthier routine is favored.

Aquarius Excessive behavior should be ended before it takes control. Be kind to your body and protect it from anything that may become habit-forming or costly.

Pisces Participate in functions that allow you to mingle and network with people who can help you get ahead. A partnership will be financially advantageous. EUGENIA LAST
